MISCELLANEOUS READING. REMINISCENCES OF IRVING.

Every anecdote or incident concerning Mr.

rving will be treasured by his friends .-

As as instance of his kindness to animals, he said one day to his physician, when they met in the road a team which had formerly belonged to him: 'I can't bear to see those poor horses drawing dirt. They were once my carriage horses. I shall never again sell any animal that belongs to me.' The hor-ses, however, were well cared for, the owner being very proud of them. Mr. T. Addison Richards gives us the two following incidents. While he was sketching the pleasant picture seen through two beautiful dras, as you look up the river from the Sunnyside lawn, and talking with Mr. Irving, the latter tell into some allusions to his advancing age and declining strength, and added, with his characteristic sly humor: Some twenty years ago, I carried both those trees on my shoulder; but, bless you, I couldn't do it now!' He had planted the trees himself. Speaking one day of the pretty gardener's cottage, he said that he had been forced to build it; that Robert, after basking in the smiles of Fortune as a jolly, contented bacholor for many years had been overtaken by calamity, and got married; that it was a sad affair, a very sad affair, although Robert did not seem to think so, but on the contrary, deemed himself a more lucky boy than ever. Still, the thing was done, and could not be undone; and it only remained to make the best of a bad bargain. He had foreseen the consequences at once, (pointing to the youngsters playing in the cottage park,) and so set forward to plan and erect a new edifice. It was Mr. Irving's custom to buy Christmas toys for the children of his gardener and coachman, and present them himself. Last Christmas the unpleasant weather kept him in doors, but he was uneasy all day about the children, who received the presents, but, he knew would miss his visit. The next day he called upon them, to enjoy their bright smiles. in the cars one day from New York an Irish woman in the next seat could not keep her two noisy children quiet. Irving took one of them in his arms, caressed it, and when the woman got out she thanked him, saying:- You must be a kind, good father, Sir.' No,' said Mr. Irving, I am, unfortunately, an old bachelor.' The children at Tarrytown would often put flowers in his church pew. ser JOHN A. FIELD begs leave to remind is friends, that he is a candidate for the office of the off Alexandria City and County, at the next election, and respectfully solicits their votes. He refers to his past conduct as a guarantee for
